NORWICH MILITARY SPIRIT IN BATTERY B AND COMBAT TRAIN, 192nd REG'T, FIELD ARTILLERY

partment inaugurated plans for the re-organization of the National Guard garrison duties. From time to time men equipped and trained to meet any emergency that night arise during the abmest difficult.

The adjutant general of the state, Brighter General George M. Cole, to whom all credit is due for the high state of efficiency of the national guard that was called into the service in 1517, did overything nomible to encourage the reorgan.

The 58th Artillers served 110 days on the control of the contro thing nosable to encourage the reorganish of the national guard after the armistice. Letters were sent to all old organisation commanders urging them to interest themselves in the guard. Generally the appeal was received with very little interest. However, in New London of Sergeant Major Robert O. Fletcher of erally the appeal was received with very little interest. However, in New London Captain David Conner, a veteran of three wars, who had just been discharged for the third time from federal service, set about reorganizing the 10th Co. C. A. C., C. N. G. Recruiting was very slow, and mot until Sept. 7, 1220, was the organization federally recognized. In the meantime Captain W. R. Denison of Norwich, Conn., also a veteran of the World war, was working on the reorganization of the 2rd Co., C. A. C., C. N. G. This unit was federally recognized Sept. 8, 1320.

In August of 1229 Major M. B. Payne of New London, who was in the Connecticut C. A. C. at the outbreak of the war and who served with the 55th regiment was a unit manufacture and was developed early in the war to combat the German 150 mm. gun. ment overseas was requested by the ing of the coast artiflers throughout Con-necticut. Major Payne consented to do this with the understanding that the troops so recruited would be organized as a recrease of mobile artillery. It was accord that this would be done if was served that this would be done if the milith bureau of the war decartment would make such an allottment to Connectiout. Through the efforts of Col. 3. Moss Ives of Danbury, a member of the general stuff, the war department announced that a regiment of mobile artificity to be outpred with 155 m.m. guns sentil be allotted to Connecticut. As soon as this information was received the recruiting of the regiment specied up to that by May 31, 1921, the entire regiment consisting of a headquarters hatbery, service buttery, three buttallon combat trains and six firing butteries (A. B. but trains and six firing batteries (A, B C. D. E and F) were federally recog sized. There are in the resiment sixteen officers and about three hundred enlisted men who served with the 56tk Artillery, C. A. C., overseas.

The first duty to be performed by the sew regiment was when it went into camp for fifteen days at Camp Devens, Mass. last June. This camp in all probability is the first and last purely infantry camp that the regiment will ever sarticipate in. The organization of the tain the guns and tractors for the 1921 camp so that the work done consisted of infantry and small arms work.

In the future the summer encamp tank Point or some such place where long ranges for artillery firing are avail-able.

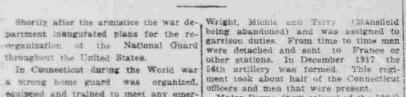

At Camp Devens the work taken up was rigid and will have a lasting effect, on all who participated. Opportunities for all kinds of sports were provided and enjoyed by officers and men alike. The first brigade review of the new Connecti-cut National Guard was held while at Devens and was participated in by the 192d Artillery and the new Connecti-cut regiment of infantry which was fed-scrally recognized May 22, 1921. Colonel, Payne of the 192d Artillery being the senior officer present, was in command of the brigade while it was being reviewed by his excellency, Governor Everett J. Lake, commander-in-chief of the Connecticut National Guard.

The most striking thing regarding the property was the internal interest.

samp at Devens was the intense interest stayed by the members of the organthe attempts of one to outdo the other In baying the best food, the cleanest efficien, the best appearing outilt, the best fixelplined unit and so on. It was fifteen to the instructor, Major G. W. Essterday, U. S. A. at times to make a fection as to who should receive the heat murk. Altogether it probably was which Connecticut troops were a part. Previous to the World war the arti ery of Connecticut consisted of two field artiflery batteries and thirteen compan-ies of coast artillery. The coast artil-lery companies were originally, except the 1st Co., New London, part of the led and 4th regiments of infantry. The

having such a regiment assigned to it especially as there are only two in all of New England.

The formation of the 192d regiment is omplete, there being now in the regi-ment 60 officers and 1022 men. Most of the units are enlisted to full strength and some to over strength. In the event of war the regiment will go into the service fully equipped and prepared for any sort of duty and will not as was the case in 1917 be broken up and assigned to new organizations and go through a long period of training.

BATTERY B OF NORWICH

ABLE MILITARY ORGANIZATION The history of Battery B, which is the Norwich battery of the 192d regiment, field artillery, C. N. G., dates from March 6, 1920, when Capt. William R. Denison was appointed recruiting officer for the reorganized national guard. Dr. A. C.

Freeman was post surgeon.

The 3rd Co., Conn. Coast Artillery corps, C. N. G., was federally recognized Sept. 8, 1920. It was the second coast artillery company in the state to be federally recognized, a number of ex-service men forming the nucleus of the or-

After drilling for several weeks in civilian clothes, arms and equipment be-gan to arrive and interest in the organeraging over one a week. Monday is the usual drill night, while a number of special drills required to complete the training for field service before the next camp period are held- on Wednesday nights. Whenever possible. If weather permits, outside drills are held on Chel sea parade, where extended order, bayo-net work and skirmish drills afford an uteresting change in the program. The men are receiving instruction in the care and use of the army rifle and automatic pistol with which each man is equipped. Specially selected men are trained in the use of automatic rifles, there being eight issued to the battery, and the two Browning machine guns which have recently arrived. The automatic rifle can be carried by one man and is capable of firing 500 shots per minute. Because the 155 mm. G. P. F. gun positions cannot be quickly vacated and are often very near the front lines. it is necessary for the men to understand defensive infantry tactics. Besides the infantry work, as the battery is an artiilery organization, the men must under-stand the handling of the big guns, bringing them up into positions, firing the pleus from the data which must be figured out by the battery commander's detail, laying communication wires and many other duties little thought of by most people.

In action the battery is assigned a lo-cation and definite enemy territory to cover with often objectives such as bridges, dugouts, ammunition dumps and trenches to demolish. The battery com-mander goes forward with the advance detail, selects and prepares the location for the battery. Usually advanced positions are occupied at night and camounaged if in the open. The camouflage is designed to screen the battery position from the enemy and prevent airplane observation. Observation details with instruments are seed out to observe struments are sent out to observe targets and report the effect of fire. The comand report the effect of fire. The com-munication detail is responsible for the proper laying of telephone wires between the observation posts, gun positions, bat-tery commander's station and echelon, which is the position taken by the battery

Training during the next six months in preparation for the summer eamp will be intensive in order that the various details may be proficient in their duties. The observation detail's instruction will cover the use of compass, map reading, sketching and use of range finding instruments. The communication detail must understand the laying of telephone wires, use of the field service telephone and switchboard, the buzzer and visual signaling.

The gun sections, each under a ser-geant, who is chief of section, consist of 13 men and the corporal, who is gunner.

NORWICH MAYOR COMMENDS CITY'S MILITARY COMPANIES

For many years Norwich has been communently identified with the milltary and naval interests of this state community look upon our two mili-tary companies with a great deal of pride.

The training and discipline received under the supervision of officers ed under the supervision of outcome of long experience, are, I am sure, of the greatest of value to our young men and a company that has a part men and a company that has a part in the nution's defense cannot help but have its mural influence upon the community in which it is located
